Fund Commentary

The Dexus Global REIT Fund (the Fund) returned 3.15%⁷ over the quarter, which was 178bps ahead of the return of its benchmark.

At a regional level, the largest positive contributor to the Fund's relative performance was superior stock selection in North America. This was most evident amongst Canadian REITs where the Fund outperformed the benchmark by 988bps, mostly due to its overweight to the senior housing sector.

At a sub-sector level, the Fund's overweight exposure to select Datacentre and Healthcare REITs contributed to positive performance. This was most pronounced in US hyperscale datacentres, medical office buildings and seniors housing. relatively lower allocation to Retail and Single-family REITs, however, detracted from performance through the period.

At a stock level, the largest contributor to the Fund's relative performance through the quarter was an overweight position in Retail Opportunities Investment Corporation (NYSE:ROIC), a specialised owner and manager of grocery-anchored shopping centres located within densely populated metropolitan areas across the West Coast of the United States. Blackstone announced in November its definitive agreement to acquire ROIC for a 34% premium to the share price prior to news of a potential sale being made public. CTO Realty Growth Inc (NYSE:CTO) was another top performing Retail REIT held by the fund. Its portfolio comprises grocery anchored and lifestyle retail shopping centres located in the US sunbelt. We continue to like select high quality Retail REITs given the lack of new supply and resilient demand for essential items.

The largest detractor to the Fund's relative performance through the quarter was an underweight position in Simon Property Group (NYSE:SPG), a specialist owner and manager of retail malls and outlet centres across the US. We have actively limited the Fund's exposure to discretionary retail landlords, given the outlook for discretionary spending. We have instead allocated to those portfolios providing access to non-discretionary items where retailer sales are likely to prove more resilient.

As relative-value investors looking for growth at a reasonable price, our investment preference remains for REITs with resilient, growing income streams and solid capital structures. Pleasingly, select REITs sharing these attributes currently appear miss-priced by the public market.

Despite recent strong relative performance, in our view select global REITs continue to offer attractive long-term total return prospects and we will continue to focus the Fund's exposure to these opportunities.

Market Commentary⁸

Global REITs (GPR 250 REIT Index (AU)) returned 1.37% through the December quarter, underperforming global equities (MSCI World Index (AU) which returned 12.11%. Country level performance was driven by the United States (4.13%) while, Australia (-7.69%), Belgium (-13.02%), Canada (-10.65%) and the United Kingdom (-11.80%) lagged.

At a sub-sector level Datacentre REITs (20.5%) performed the strongest driven by demand for AI capacity. Consumer adoption of AI tools is accelerating in fields like coding, graphic design, pharmaceuticals, robotics, & education which all require more compute power. Overall vacancy remains below 2% with most new supply pre-leased to hyperscale users on long-term leases.

At a high level, Global REIT sector performance continues to be driven largely by inflation expectations and the ensuing pathway for interest rates. Inflationary forces have proven to be sticky in developed economies including Australia but are decelerating globally into the 2-3% range. Throughout the quarter, however, the sector reacted negatively to the US federal reserve's slower than expected pace of interest rate cuts despite more aggressive cutting observed in Canada, the United Kingdom and the Eurozone.

The last of the major developed-economy election processes for 2024 took place in the US and resulted in the re-election of Donald Trump as President. While policy uncertainty exists, this result is expected to boost the reshoring of US manufacturing and rapid AI development, potentially benefiting industrial and datacentre demand. Substantial tariffs and deportations, if they eventuate, would likely lead to cost increases in construction dampening supply growth for most sectors.

Our analysis of Global REIT sector performance suggests that on balance tenant demand is robust, market rental levels are either stable or growing and there is further support for top-line revenue growth as annual rent indexation progresses through existing leases. Implications of the difficult development financing and construction cost environment has also led to a general lack of built-form supply which should bode well for incumbent landlords. This set-up suggests select well capitalised and managed REITs are positioned to deliver strong returns, in our view.

In our view, performance from here will be led by select Global REITs which have been able to manage their balance sheets well and enjoy the flexibility to actively deploy capital into the next cyclical upswing. As an active manager, we are currently looking to capitalise on these opportunities as we actively manage the portfolio.

7. Returns after all fees and expenses. Assumes distributions are reinvested. Investors' tax rates are not taken into account when calculating returns. Returns and values may rise and fall from one period to another. Past performance is not an indicator of future performance. Fund's inception date used to determine return: 1 April 2020
